Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 36.

Many people imagine city life as loud, crowded, and full of stress—and often, they are right. Large cities are full of traffic, constant noise, and people in a hurry. With so many things happening at once, it's easy to feel overwhelmed. However, living in a big city doesn't always mean giving up peace and calm. In fact, more and more city dwellers are finding small ways to enjoy quiet moments. Some visit local parks during lunch breaks, others wake up early to take a walk before the streets get busy. Cities today are also changing to support healthier lifestyles. Urban planners now include more green spaces, bike lanes, and quiet zones. Rooftop gardens, small lakes, and community walking trails give people a chance to relax and connect with nature without leaving the city. Many people also practice mindfulness or meditation, even for just five minutes a day, to clear their minds and reduce stress. In cities like Tokyo, London, and New York, you can find meditation rooms, nature cafés, and even libraries designed for silence. The key to peaceful city living is finding balance. It's important to take breaks, limit screen time, and do things that recharge your energy. Simple habits—like enjoying a book in a quiet café or listening to music on a park bench—can help create calm in a noisy world. While city life may never be completely quiet, people can choose to build peace into their routines.

Question 31. What is one way people find calm in a busy city?

- A. Working extra hours
- B. Visiting parks or walking early
- C. Avoiding nature and environment
- D. Driving longer routes
