Ben and the car

Ben and his parents lived in a big town. They didn't have a car. Ben walked to school, Dad went to work on his bicycle and Mum always took the bus. But Ben liked cars. He liked the big silver car which Jack, the man who lived next to them, had. Ben washed Jack's car for him every week and sometimes he liked sitting in it and thinking about driving.

Then one day Dad hurt his foot. He said, 'Now we have to buy a car because I can't ride my bike.' The next day they went to look at cars so they could decide which one to buy.

'I like that one,' said Mum. But Dad and Ben said, 'It's too small.' 'What about this one?' said Dad and Ben. But Mum said, 'It's too expensive.' 'I want a big silver car,' said Ben. 'Sorry,' said the man in the shop, 'We don't have any of those.'

Ben's parents decided not to buy a car that day, so Ben was unhappy that evening. But the next morning Jack came to Ben's house. He spoke to the family. 'I'm going to work in another country for a year,' he said. 'Could you look after my car for me?'

So now Ben and his parents go out of town every weekend to new places in the lovely, big silver car.
