A Day in the Cloud Forest

Yesterday, I guided a group of students through the Monteverde Cloud Forest Reserve. The weather was misty and cool, perfect for spotting wildlife. As we walked along the hanging bridges, we could see tall trees covered with moss and colorful orchids. The group was excited when we observed several hummingbirds flying around the flowers. We also saw a few monkeys moving between the branches. During the hike, I explained how the forest helps protect many endangered species and how visitors can support conservation through responsible tourism. The students listened carefully and asked many questions about animals and plants. At the end of the tour, we visited the butterfly garden, where the students took photos and relaxed before returning to the lodge.

Answer the following questions based on the previous reading:

1. Where did the tour take place?

2. What was the weather like?

3. What animals did they observe?

4. What did the students do at the end of the tour?

5. Were the students interested in conservation?

B. Read the text carefully and then answer the five questions in complete sentences.

Sustainable Tourism in Action

EcoGuides Travel has offered sustainable tours for more than ten years in several natural areas of Costa Rica. The company works to protect the environment and support local communities. It has trained local people as guides so they can share their knowledge about the rainforest, animals, and local culture.

During the tours, visitors take part in activities such as planting native trees, cleaning riverbanks, and learning how to recycle. The company also supports reforestation projects and teaches tourists how to travel responsibly.

EcoGuides believes that tourism should protect nature, not destroy it. For them, sustainability means enjoying natural beauty while taking care of the planet and respecting the people who live there.
