Reading

Gulliver's Travels is a satirical novel written by Jonathan Swift. It tells the story of Lemuel Gulliver, who travels to different lands inhabited by fantastical creatures. The work critiques 18th-century society and politics through the use of humor and fantasy.

Robinson Crusoe, written by Daniel Defoe, tells the story of a man shipwrecked on a deserted island who must learn to survive on his own. It is a realistic novel that emphasizes self-reliance, hard work, and perseverance.

Although both novels feature protagonists who face extraordinary adventures, Gulliver's Travels focuses on social criticism and satire, while Robinson Crusoe centers on survival and individual experience.
