Twins

People always (0) finds twins fascinating. Often, parents can't resist dressing (1) them twins in the same style, opting for (2) matched outfits, hairstyles and even braids. This tendency to create a visual connection between twins can be charming, but it can also overshadow their unique (3) jdentity.

One of the challenges that twins face (4) were the pressure to be seen as a unit instead of as individuals. They may be frequently compared (5) with each other, with family and friends inadvertently highlighting their similarities rather than their unique personalities.

For example, at school, teachers might group the twins together while assuming that they learn and behave the same way. Therefore, (6) these casts a shadow over their individual strengths and interests.

Moreover, many twins experience an internal conflict (7) among loyalty to their twin and the desire for individuality, making their personal journeys confusing to navigate. Although, being a twin comes with many joys, the road to self-discovery can be (8) complicate by the expectations and perceptions that society imposes on them.
