- A. On the next day, they came to the materials shop to discuss the matter. After some bargaining, they made an agreement. Nayau and several supportive friends began working together to build a dam and a mill house along with a water channel in the form of a long ditch. They worked collectively, piling sandbags, covering the generator with zinc, and never stopped working even when they were tired.
- B. “If we don’t try to change our condition, who else will change it for us?” Nayau said quietly. He reminded his friends that waiting for the government would not solve their problem. “Together is stronger than alone,” he added. Some people, inspired by his words, agreed to help him. They decided to work together for their village.
- C. One night, in the village of Gurung Mali in West Kalimantan, the night was dark and cold. There was no electricity, and people could only go to bed early. A man named Nayau often thought of how he could make his village bright at night so people could do more activities.
- D. After three months, the micro hydropower plant was finally completed. The villagers were filled with joy. Those who once doubted Nayau now cheered and became more enthusiastic to protect the forest and the river. Nayau smiled proudly and whispered, “Togetherness can break through limitations.”
- E. The existence of electricity in their village seemed impossible because the government’s facility was too far away. But Nayau didn’t give up. He gathered his friends to discuss building a micro hydropower plant. Some agreed, but others doubted him because of the cost and difficulty.
