Octopus

Octopuses are extremely intelligent. They can learn new things just like humans. They've even learned a few tricks to get them out of sticky situations. If an octopus is threatened by a predator, such as a shark or bird, it can use some pretty incredible skills to get away. Octopuses don't have teeth or sharp claws to defend themselves. Instead, they use more clever ways to fool their attackers. Octopuses like to hide themselves in the sand on the bottom of the ocean floor. How you ask? Well, the octopus is like a chameleon because it can change the color of its skin to match the sand. And this color change, or camouflage, happens in less than a minute.

History of New York City

New York City is one of the most recognized cities in the world. It held the record for largest city for many years. However, now Tokyo holds that record.

New York City is made up of five main areas. These areas are called boroughs. They include Manhattan, Staten Island, the Bronx, Queens, and Brooklyn. These boroughs weren't always a part of New York City, as you will see.

The city was first founded in the year 1624. It was called New Amsterdam. The Dutch people bought the land from a native tribe. This piece of land was a small island that is part of Manhattan today.

In the 1660's, the British seized the land from the Dutch. This means they took over the city. They changed the name to New York.

Over the next one hundred years, many people immigrated to New York. Many of them came from European countries. When the Revolutionary War between the American colonists and the British began, the city was taken by the British soldiers. It stayed under their command until the 1780's.

At last the war ended. Americans had won the war and New York City was considered a part of the United States of America. In fact, it was the capital of the country for five years. It was where George Washington was named President.

New York City was an important part of America's economy. That means it was a key part of the country's buying and selling industry. The city was a port for buyers and sellers who traded their goods. Southerners sent their crops north to New York City so the goods could be shipped to Europe. Other countries shipped their goods to New York City so the products could be sold in America.
