Not so cool at school

It was a sunny Monday morning in spring when Toby's dad dropped him off at the school gates. Toby was wearing his school uniform – a white shirt with a red tie, a pair of black trousers and a hooded jacket – and carrying his school bag and football kit. He was looking forward to another week of lessons with his classmates.

As soon as he walked through the gates, Toby saw his friends, Jim and Chris, standing in the playground. He went over to talk to them, then they all went inside the school together, chatting about what fun they had at the weekend. In the corridor, they stopped outside their lockers. Toby opened his and looked inside.

"What have we got this morning?" he asked his friends.

"Maths and French," Chris replied. "Did you study for the French test?"

"Of course!" Toby said, searching in his locker to find his Maths textbook and French dictionary. "Well, my grandma came round for lunch yesterday, anyway."

Jim laughed. "You're so lucky!" he said. "Your grandma taught you French when you were a little kid, and now you get top marks in every test without even trying. It's much harder for the rest of us, you know!"

"I still have to learn how to spell the words," Toby reminded him. "My grandma only taught me to speak French, not to read and write it."

"Well, I still think it's not fair," joked Jim.

"Come on, guys," interrupted Chris. "Let's go. It's nearly 9 o'clock."

Toby slammed his locker shut. "Relax, Chris," he said. "We're never late."

Toby started to walk away towards their classroom, but something pulled him back and he fell against the lockers.

Chris and Jim laughed. "Very cool, Toby!" Chris said. "You shut your hood in your locker!"

Toby felt a bit embarrassed at first, especially as Jim had to help him open his locker and get his hood out, but soon he joined his friends and they laughed together as they walked to class.
