(1) It is still believed by some that opening an umbrella indoors will bring bad luck. The origin of this superstition is not totally known. It is generally believed to have started in Ancient Egypt. Back then, umbrellas protected people of noble blood from the heat the heat of the sun, not from the rain and were thought to push away spirits who might harm them to open an umbrella inside or even in the shade would anger the god of the sun.

(2) Another theory states that the superstition had its roots in 18th century London, England. At that time, the inhabitants of London had umbrellas that were water-proof and extremely large in size. These umbrellas had metal her spokes, and they were not convenient to open inside a building. They could cause injury to people or break objects inside a house or in a small space. Because of this, it was often recommended that one should not open up an umbrella while visiting another house out of general rule

(3) Some believe that bad luck that's not occur if the umbrella has just been opened outdoors and then brought inside to dry. Bad luck is also associated with an umbrella if it is the color black, was received it as a gift, has never been used outside in the rain, is opened on a ship, or is dropped on the floor

2. The exact size of an umbrella used in London.
3. The difficulty of getting an umbrella in the 18th century.
4. The reason why people did not open umbrellas inside London houses.

21. Based on the passage, who is most likely to have bad luck?
1. Lulu, who has opened her umbrella on a ship.
  2. Linda, who has used her umbrella outside in the rain.
  3. Liz, who has dried her open umbrella inside the house.
  4. Lala, who has given a black umbrella to a friend.
22. What can be inferred from the passage?
1. Black is considered the symbol of death.
  2. In the 18th century, most houses in London were very small.
