FAMILY

In most parts of the world a family is made up of a wife, husband and their children. Sometimes grandparents, uncles and their children and even cousins are also included. However, this is not the case all the time. In some countries a man has several wives which is called polygamy. Sometimes, though it is very rare, a woman has several husbands which is called polyandry. There are different types of families in different parts of the world. In Africa the chief of a tribe usually has more than one wife. In some Arabic countries a man can have up to four wives, and this is called a compound family. Being a "family" means couples' doing things together. In this way they can bring up the children properly and safely. The father and the mother have different roles. In a traditional family, the father usually works, earns a living and protects the rest of the family while the mother looks after the home and raises the children. However, in the last fifty years family structure has changed because of the developments in social life. Women, as well as men, are taking control in the home and at work. They provide jointly for the family.
