READING (10p)

A different life

Sara Huntingdon works for a children's organization in Africa.

Every day, she writes her blog for an online news website.

Wednesday 25th

Every morning, I get up at six o'clock and go to the refugee camp. 1,000 families live there. They don't have much food or water.

I sometimes work in the children's centre. It is in a big, old house near the camp and it is open to small children. They are four, five, or six years old. When I open the door in the morning, it's usually hot inside. I prepare lessons and games, then I always have coffee and bread for breakfast.

When the children arrive at half past seven, they go into the house and meet their friends. They talk and relax and play games. They like games! Then we start school at quarter past eight. I teach English and art, and I sometimes teach maths. They can speak English well but they can't write in English. I always answer the children's questions. They usually want to hear about my life in England – and about my boyfriend! I cook some food and they eat it before they go home. Every day at the children's centre is a fantastic experience for the children and for their teacher.

At half past eleven in the morning, the children go home. For four hours every day, the children don't think about their problems. And that's very important.
