School for Orangutans!

Everyone needs to go to school. We need to learn things that can help us when we grow up. But what about animals?

People say that animals are born with instincts and know naturally how to survive. However, that is not exactly true. Animals depend a lot on their mothers, at least for a short time, to teach them different skills. So, what happens when they have no mothers? For many baby orangutans in Borneo this is an enormous problem. Young orangutans are like human babies because they stay with their mothers for a long time. They learn lots of skills from their mothers before they can live by themselves. But a lot of orangutans are dying in Borneo because people are cutting down the rainforests where they live. Babies are losing their mothers and it is impossible for them to survive. The charity International Animal Rescue tries to save them. Today in Borneo there is a special school for orphaned baby orangutans! Volunteers teach them all the things they need to learn. At Baby School they learn how to climb trees, what to eat and where to build nests to sleep safely. The good students go on to Forest School and later they return to the jungle. Humans aren't the same as mother orangutans but they give these lovable babies a real chance to live.
