Love in literature

If you've ever been in love and felt tongue-tied and vulnerable, unable to say how you truly feel, then you could do worse than seek inspiration from the great writers of the nineteenth century. We think of them as reserved, but in truth, they really knew how to talk about love. The euphoria of infatuation, the self-sacrifice of devotion, and the joy of true love are all expressed in their immortal lines.

A. From Wuthering Heights by Emily Brontë

'My love for Linton is like the foliage in the woods: time will change it... My love for Heathcliff resembles the eternal rocks beneath: a source of little visible delight, but necessary. Nelly, I am Heathcliff! He's always, always in my mind... as my own being.'

B. From The Woman in White by Wilkie Collins

'Where is the woman who has ever really torn from her heart the image that has been once fixed in it by a true love? Books tell us that such unearthly creatures have existed – but what does our own experience say in answer to books?'

C. From Our Mutual Friend by Charles Dickens

'I love you... I am under the influence of some tremendous attraction which I have resisted in vain... You could draw me to fire, you could draw me to water, you could draw me to any death... But if you would return a favourable answer to my offer of myself in marriage, you could draw me to any good... with equal force.'

D. From The Portrait of a Lady by Henry James

'It has made me better, loving you ... it has made me wiser and easier, and ... brighter and nicer and even stronger. I used to want a great many things before... Theoretically I was satisfied, as I once told you... Now I'm really satisfied, because I can't think of anything better.'

E. From A Tale of Two Cities by Charles Dickens

'I wish you to know that you have been the last dream of my soul ... In the hour of my death, I shall hold sacred the one good remembrance... that my last avowal of myself was made to you... think now and then that there is a man who would give his life, to keep a life you love beside you!'

F. From Jane Eyre by Charlotte Brontë

'I have for the first time found what I can truly love – I have found you. You are my sympathy – my better self – my good angel... I think you good, gifted, lovely: a fervent, a solemn passion is conceived in my heart... it ... fuses you and me in one.'

In which extract A–F does the speaker...

1. mention a past discussion with their beloved? _____
2. contrast an eternal, essential love with a more superficial affection? _____
3. speak as if this is a final declaration with no expectation of a future together? _____
4. make their own happiness dependent on the other person's positive response? _____
5. describe feeling a love of similar nature and intensity for two different people? _____
6. cast doubt on whether love in books reflects real-life experience? _____
7. focus on their lover's inner qualities rather than their physical appearance? _____
8. recall a specific past moment spent alone with the person they love? _____
9. attempt to prompt a verbal answer to an offer they have just made? _____
10. state that being in love has unquestionably improved their own character? _____
