Working in Two Languages

In the world today, it helps to be bilingual. When you speak two languages, you have more choices. You can get a job in many different fields. In this article, we look at two of them.

Travel & Tourism

Across the world, one in every ten jobs today is in travel and tourism. Millions of people work in this field, and many of them are bilingual.

The jobs with the best pay are usually in management. Bilingual hotel and sales managers, for example, can make good money. Some managers have hospitality degrees.

But many others start in different jobs (for example, hotel clerk). They get experience and then, in time, they work their way up into management.

Healthcare

Today, there is a nursing shortage. Worldwide, there are about 28 million nurses, and we need almost six million more. In big cities in a number of countries, hospitals especially need bilingual nurses. Nursing jobs are different from many travel and tourism jobs: you need a degree to get one.
