/5

I got the qualifications to be an engineer, but now I work in an office. The wages are really good, but I'm not happy in my job. I could look for a job in engineering, but I'm afraid the wages won't be very good. What should I do?

Lots of our readers have asked us similar questions. In the past, most people started their career after school or university and they did the same thing for the rest of their working life. Currently, it's common to study for a certain profession, but have a completely different career. The main reasons are wages, but other factors like the number of hours, holidays or location affect our decisions.

Firstly, you need to think about what's important to you. Wages are important for most of us, but maybe you don't need to earn so much money. If you don't need to earn a lot, you'll have more jobs to select from. Why not note down everything you spend your money on? Maybe you don't need to go clothes shopping every month or maybe you don't need three holidays a year.

Secondly, you should decide whether you really want to go back to engineering. Just because you've got qualifications in it, you don't have to work in it now. However, if you enjoy the subject, try finding out what the jobs are like. You can get information from professional websites which will help you consider the advantages and disadvantages of being an engineer.

You should also think about whether there's something else you'd like to do – maybe a job you've always dreamed of. You might be worried about doing something completely different, but you only live once! You just need to focus on the skills you need for the new job. It may be that you already have them, but, if not, you can go to college to "reskill".

Lastly, don't be afraid of making decisions. We have to make choices about so many things and we never know what's going to happen. But you shouldn't stick with a job you don't like because you'll become unhappy. Just make up your mind about what you want to do and put all of your energy into reaching that goal.

6 Read the text again. Choose the correct answer, A, B, C or D.

 - A People prefer not to study for a profession.
 - B People stay in the same job for life.
 - C People choose their jobs for different reasons.
 - D People get lower wages than in the past.
- 2 The writer suggests ...
 - A spending your money on clothes and holidays.
 - B working out how much money you need.
 - C trying to get a job with better wages.
 - D making a note of jobs that interest you.
- 3 Why does the writer recommend looking at websites?
 - A To find out what qualifications you need for a job.
 - B To find out what the most enjoyable jobs are.
 - C To find out how to be more professional.
 - D To find out the good and bad points of a job.
- 4 What does "reskill" mean in the fourth paragraph?
 - A Learn skills to help you get a new job
 - B Use your skills for a different job
 - C Focus on getting a new job
 - D Do a job that does not need any skills
- 5 What is the writer's advice in the final paragraph?
 - A Make a decision and focus on achieving it.
 - B Stay in your job even if you're unhappy.
 - C Avoid making difficult decisions about work.
 - D Don't worry about making bad choices about work.

Communication

The way we communicate is what makes us different from animals. Most animals can communicate in some way, but human communication is much more complicated. Communication allows us to share the content of our minds with others. It lets us express our feelings, teach each other new skills, and avoid fights.

We communicate in different ways, such as the use of body language, pictures and noises. We can also speak and write, which allow us to communicate more complicated ideas. Some scientists believe we could speak to each other more than 100,000 years ago. Of course, this is a guess because there are no records of the earliest conversations, but we know that written language probably appeared around 5,000 years ago.

By 1500 printing machines were popular all over Europe. They had been invented by Gutenberg in around 1440 and they could print 3,500 pages a day. People could finally share ideas quickly and easily. Written communication became more important and, as a result, more people learnt to read and write. Nowadays, more than 85 percent of the world's population can read and write.

Of course, the internet has been the biggest development of modern times. Although it became popular in the 1990s, it was actually invented in the 1960s. The telephone and the computer were important inventions, but the internet allows us to communicate in even more ways. It has helped to connect universities, businesses and ordinary people all over the world. We can share spoken and written information in no time at all and more than half of the world's population uses it.

The twenty-first century has seen further developments in these technologies, including the invention of technology you can wear, like smartwatches. Although we had devices like calculator watches in the 1970s, new smartwatches appeared in 2013. These could connect our bodies to the internet. For example, a smartwatch can record important data about your health and send it to your doctor. Technology is beginning to communicate for us.

In future, technology will let us communicate in even more unusual ways. For example, one company, launched in 2016, is looking for ways to allow computers to communicate directly with our mind. By 2050, these technologies might lead to completely new types of communication. Some people think that we may even be able to read each other's thoughts!
