

Hello, and welcome to another big question:
How does music make us feel?

I'm really tired. What should I do?
I know—I'll listen to some music.

Sorry, I just love this music.
It really wakes me up.

I love all kinds of music.
When I listen to music, I feel different things.
Fast music makes me feel excited, and I really love guitar music.

How does fast music make you feel?

Music makes different people feel different things, and there are no right or wrong feelings about music.

There are many different kinds of music.
Some music is high, and some music is low.
Some music is fast, and some music is slow.

Listen to this trombone.
Is it high or low?
It's quite low.
How does it make you feel?

Now listen to this band.
Is their music fast or slow?
How does it make you feel?

Look at all these people.
They are all listening to music and dancing.
How do you think they feel?

I'm painting a picture.
I love painting, and I often listen to music at the same time.
The music helps me to imagine things.
Sometimes the music is fast, and I can imagine animals running.
When it's slow, I can imagine them sleeping.

Music can help us imagine lots of things.
Music can help us imagine things in nature, like the sun, the rain, and the snow.

Listening to music makes us feel lots of different things.
Playing music makes us feel things too.

I play the guitar every day, and I love it.

It makes me feel very happy.

Last week, I played in a concert and performed a guitar solo.

At first, I was really nervous, but it went very well, and in the end, I was very excited.

I love all kinds of music.

I love listening to music and playing music.

What's your favorite type of music?
