Section one:- Reading passage

Frehiwot is policewoman. She's young and of medium height and weight. She spends her work time in the various streets of Addis Ababa. She helps people. Every day she gets up at twelve o'clock in the morning. She takes a shower, brushes her teeth and puts on her clothes. Then, she eats breakfast at half past six. At one o'clock, she takes any means of transport, private or government, to the traffic police officers station found in eastern Addis Ababa, Bole Sub-City.

Frehiwot starts work at half past one. She puts on her uniform, khaki, dark blue trousers, light blue shirt with white sleeves and a dark blue cap and gets her gun. Like her colleagues, she also wears light, bright lemon green reflector vest to facilitate their visibility.

Along with her male colleagues, and depending on the location, she patrols on foot, on motor bicycles or by vehicles. As a traffic officer, she is responsible for directing traffic during parades, road work or accidents. Sometimes, traffic officers direct pedestrian foot traffic as well as heavy traffic. They may assume the responsibility of the crossing guard if one is not present. Traffic officers may also control crowds during emergencies to make sure fire and rescue workers can get to the scene safely.

Traffic officers have to monitor the behaviour of road users. They need to be on the alert for intoxicated,reckless or negligent road users and ensure motorists/drivers have valid driving license and traffic violations do not escape from notice. Traffic officers conduct traffic stops and a check on passengers' identification. Like her colleagues, Frehiwot, among other duties, enforces parking and speed limit regulations.

She goes home at eleven o'clock except at times of her night time duties. In the evening, she takes a bath and changes her clothes, the uniform. Her beloved and considerate mother, Woizero Dinknesh, and younger sister, Misgana, prepare food and coffee. They have dinner and coffee together usually at about 2 o'clock. Then she watches TV and chats with her family. She tells them how she spent the day and her amazing encounters. At three o'clock, she goes to bed. Her days are filled with warm as well as routinely dangerous moments.
