Daniel is a wildlife photographer who works in an international environmental organization. Although he graduated on Engineering, he later got a training of photography and eventually became proficient at nature and adventure photography. He is currently in responsibility of documenting endangered species, which means he is responsible of both the visual material and the safety of the team that travels with him.

He used to have worked in an office job, which he found extremely stressed, but now he says that deal with unpredictable situations in nature is less emotionally exhausting. Even so, he has had to deal to dangerous conditions, such as parachuting into remote areas and flying in a hot air balloon to photograph migration routes.

At home, he has a Border Collie, which breed is known for being intelligent and energetic. Interestingly, despite being adventurous, Daniel isn't good in music and can't play an instrument, something he jokes about when he's out from work between projects.
