Introduction

In this activity, you will learn about the 16th Street Baptist Church bombing. This event was a very sad part of the Civil Rights Movement. You will answer questions to show what you learned about this event.

Here are some words that will help you understand the story:

- Segregation: This means keeping people of different races apart. For example, black and white kids had to go to different schools.
- Civil Rights: These are the rights that everyone should have, no matter their race. An example is the right to vote or go to the same school.
- Bombing: This is when a bomb explodes and causes damage. In the story, a bomb was used to hurt people.

Comprehension Tips

Read slowly and carefully. Look for the main ideas in each paragraph. Think about how the ideas connect to each other.

Read the Following Text

On September 15, 1963, a bomb exploded at the 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, Alabama. This church was a central meeting place for civil rights activities. The explosion killed four young girls: Addie Mae Collins, Carol Denise McNair, Carole Robertson, and Cynthia Wesley. The bombing was an act of racial violence during the Civil Rights Movement.

Before the bombing, the church was a safe place for black people to plan meetings and organize protests. Black people faced segregation (being kept apart) and discrimination (being treated unfairly). They worked hard to gain civil rights (equal rights for all).

The bombing showed the terrible side of racism. It made many people angry and sad. It also made more people want to support civil rights. Many saw the bombing as proof that segregation had to end.

After the bombing, support grew for new laws to protect civil rights. One such law was the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This law made segregation illegal. It also helped to end discrimination in jobs and schools.

The 16th Street Baptist Church bombing was a key moment in the Civil Rights Movement. It helped to change laws and minds. It reminds us of the need to keep fighting for equality and justice.
