After I left school, I decided to go travelling for two months with two friends. We began by spending <sup>0</sup> a month sailing round <sup>1</sup> _____ Mediterranean Sea, stopping off in Italy along the way. We loved <sup>2</sup> _____ south of the country for its beauty and food! We even found time for <sup>3</sup> _____ incredible day trip up to Rome. Back on the boat, we ended up in Morocco. My favourite part of our visit to this north African country was our drive through <sup>4</sup> _____ Atlas Mountains on our way to the Sahara Desert. After that, we spent a week in the colourful, bustling city of Fez, where we visited monuments and went shopping. Shop owners often made us a pot of <sup>5</sup> _____ mint tea, no doubt hoping it would encourage us to buy something!

Finding a flat to rent can be a tricky business! First of all, decide what your priorities are. Location is usually at the top of the list. However, there's little point in renting a flat right next to the university if it has very few <sup>0</sup> home comforts. If you see <sup>1</sup> _____ interesting ad, don't think twice. If you like the sound of the accommodation, you really <sup>2</sup> _____ to call the contact number fast because nice flats are hard to find. <sup>3</sup> _____ next step is to arrange a visit. It's a good idea to prepare a few questions to ask the owner. For instance, if you have a cat, make sure pets aren't <sup>4</sup> _____. Finally, check your bank account and make sure you are <sup>5</sup> _____ to pay the first month's rent.

Shared living

A

There's nothing like sharing accommodation to get to find out all about what people are really like. In my first year at university, I lived in a flat with seven other students, none of whom I had met before. I should add that I only knew one other person in the entire city, as it was a long way from home. Now, that doesn't seem ideal at first, but I was never lonely and I soon had four friends, who I hope will be friends for life. What about the other three? Put it this way, I wasn't sorry when we went our separate ways! I had nothing against Jemma, Sylvia and Jayne. They were, I'm sure, lovely people, but just not to live with. I know other students who had it much worse because they actually disliked their flatmates or just didn't get on with them. My problem is that I didn't get on with their habits!

B

Jemma and Sylvia were psychology students. They were old school friends and did everything together, unintentionally cutting the rest of us out from their social programmes and domestic routine. The only thing they didn't do as a team of two was clean! I think they came from families who had someone who did it for them. They didn't seem to know what a dishcloth was, which was very alien to someone like myself who had grown up cleaning the kitchen! When the dishwasher broke down, which happened far too often, they left dirty dishes all over not only the one small kitchen we shared, but also the whole flat. The rest of us let them do this as we didn't like the thought of confrontation. Jayne told the rest of us exactly what she thought of their cleaning skills on a regular basis, but even she was never brave enough to complain directly to their faces.

C

Jayne was the tidiest person I have ever met, definitely a positive characteristic for a flatmate. In addition to this, we all admired her natural ability to mend things. Repairing things like blocked showerheads and dealing with tangled leads was her strong point. However, she was also one of the noisiest people I have ever met! Everything she did was noisy. She loved loud music, which she played to her noisy friends. When they were talking, it sounded to me as if they were shouting and having an argument but, in fact, they were just having fun. Something else that really annoyed me was that she was forever playing computer games without using her headset, so we all had to hear the game too, which made it hard at times to study at home or even to sleep! After a few months, when we were all much more aware of the importance of establishing rules for shared living, we managed to oblige her to wear earphones.

D

Towards the end of our time with each other, our flat became more like a home with the usual rules families have. Instead of doing our shopping separately, borrowing each other's things and forgetting to replace them, we all paid the same amount per week and took it in turns to make essential purchases, such as bread and milk. We needed to remind Jemma and Sylvia of course, but even they cooperated in their own way. Far too late in the day, we began to cook together once a week. Not easy with eight people, but it was fun and helped us get to know each other better, to realise that not everyone is good at everything and to be flexible. It was a shame we hadn't thought about this at the beginning. However, despite the regular frustrations of living with seven others in a confined space, I have to say I had a fantastic time and made some great friends.

In which paragraph (A–D) does the writer ...

- 1 describe an activity the flatmates did as a group? _____
- 2 give an example of how someone helped? _____
- 3 refer to some helpful routines that were established? _____
- 4 mention one advantage of sharing accommodation? _____
- 5 refer to people with a different background to the writer? _____
