

Participles as Adjectives

In English, present participles (-ing) and past participles (-ed) can be used as adjectives.

Present Participles (-ing)

We use -ing adjectives to describe things (movies, actors, stories, scenes). They tell us how something is.

Examples:

- The movie is interesting.
- The actor is boring.
- The story is exciting.

Past Participles (-ed)

We use -ed adjectives to describe how people feel. They describe the feeling.

Examples:

- I am interested in that movie.
- She is bored during the film.
- We are excited about the new actor.
- He is frightened by horror movies.

Movie review:

Spider-Man: Homecoming is an exciting and entertaining superhero movie. The story is about Peter Parker, a young student who becomes Spider-Man. He faces a frightening villain and learns important lessons about being a hero.

The main actor, Tom Holland, is very charming and interesting as Spider-Man. His performance is amusing, and the other actors are also engaging and talented.

I felt very excited while watching the movie because the action scenes were thrilling. I was surprised by some moments and never felt bored. After the movie, I felt happy and satisfied. It is a really enjoyable movie for people who like superhero films.
