Roman rants against urban evils

An analysis of the work of the poet Juvenal, who lived in Ancient Rome in the late first century AD, has shown that <sup>1</sup> _____ then had comparable problems to people living in cities today. In his work, the poet complains about Rome's <sup>2</sup> _____ – the houses and the roads, the poor quality building and the traffic jams. He moans about overcrowded <sup>3</sup> _____, full of poor families in unsanitary conditions, exploited by landlords charging high rents. And he writes about the inadequate <sup>4</sup> _____ that fails to carry waste out of the city. To Juvenal, the crowded streets are full of half-built buildings – more like a series of <sup>5</sup> _____ than a completed project. And in the <sup>6</sup> _____, the traffic is nose to tail as wealthy citizens hog the road. Ancient Rome is a city of noise pollution, road hazards and badly-built buildings.

Uproar in court

A long-running legal battle between Fenton's, a property development company based in Manchester, and a squatters' collective protesting about the city's ongoing housing shortage ended in court yesterday. The property company's <sup>1</sup> _____ was that the squatters had broken the lock on the front door of a three-storey building owned by the company, before moving in illegally and setting up a squat in which more than thirty people lived. Despite the squatters' strong <sup>2</sup> _____ that they had used any force to enter the building, the judge ruled in the company's favour. In summing up the case, the judge was critical of the squatter's actions. His <sup>3</sup> _____ that the laws against squatting would benefit from being strengthened, making it easier for landlords to evict those occupying private property, was met with anger by Dale Gordon, one of the squatters. Gordon's heated <sup>4</sup> _____ to what the judge had said was to shout abuse calling his judgement into question. After the young man had been escorted from court, the judge resumed his summary and stated that his main <sup>5</sup> _____ in this case had been to come to a fair judgement for all parties.

Somewhere to live

A Getting tough with the travellers by Lorna Cameron

Kelly and Rory won't be appearing in court later this afternoon, despite the notice of eviction served on them. Instead, along with three other related adult couples, and the nine children they have between them, they'll be loading up their caravans for the sixth time since Christmas in preparation for the inevitable appearance of the authorities. 'We know we're trespassing,' says Kelly. 'But what are we supposed to do? Council land, grass verges, we've tried them all, and we just get moved on.'

Last summer's drunken dusk to dawn raves, and the damning press coverage that subsequently followed, has made life on the road increasingly tough for young travellers like Kelly and Rory, who admit involvement in the worst excesses. Local tolerance has been in short supply, and cash-strapped councils, once prepared to turn a blind eye to small encampments on common land, are now quick to enforce bylaws. Frustrated at what they see as crude portrayals of their lifestyle and behaviour by newspapers intent on playing to public prejudice, the travellers argue that they have as much right as everyone else to choose how and where to live, hitting out at what they see as victimization.

Landowner Lord Harris, who will be in court today, has little sympathy, pointing out that the costs of having to build farm barricades to restrict access, and having to pursue illegal encampments through the justice system, are crippling.

B Time to move on for squatters by Stephen May

After a week-long stand-off with police, a group of squatters who had been holed up in a disused and derelict warehouse near Old Market have agreed to move on, insisting they had done nothing wrong, and had not sought confrontation. The police had opposed the establishment of the squat from the start, not least because of concerns for the occupants' safety. Fears of raves, along with anxieties over city centre congestion caused by vans left near the building by the group, had angered both local citizens and the press, obliging the police to take action.

Insisting they were a legitimate squatters' rights collective, campaigning for the rights of working-class citizens to reclaim property from absent and exploitative proprietors, a spokesperson for the group said, 'We're not scumbags or junkies, we're just young people, couples, mates, siblings, with nowhere to go.' She went on to reiterate the group's demand that any empty properties in the town should be liberated for the people, and that doing so should not be categorized as criminal.

A police representative confirmed that, while the group had complied with their requests and caused no damage, they were glad they were about to see the back of the squatters. 'Where would we be if everybody just moved into places that didn't belong to them?' the spokesperson demanded.

C No room for the homeless by Teresa Pickles

Homeless people sleeping outside a church on Overton Road have been dispersed. A small transient settlement had gradually built up outside the Millennium Church: a cardboard village of boxes, blankets, pots, pans and struts of wood, creating not only a distraction for passing motorists, but a considerable inconvenience for local shopkeepers, who have long been concerned about its potential effect on their trade, and have made their feelings known in petitions to the council.

Despite a local campaign in support of the settlement, orchestrated by a local DJ and supported by all media outlets in the city, a court dispersal order was granted for their eviction on Monday, and, whilst it was expected to take until the end of the summer to move everybody on, events since have moved quickly. 'They were boozing all day, shouting and stuff,' observed Shelley Gray, who works nearby. 'There were fights in the street when the police came to say they should go.'

10 Read the news reports and answer the questions. Each text can go with more than one question.

In which text, A–C ...

- 2 was there some sympathy expressed among journalists to the people being moved? ____
- 3 is the financial cost on people other than those being moved not mentioned? ____
- 4 is it stated that the people being moved had done so before in similar circumstances? ____
- 5 were the people in the story not living under any sort of cover? ____

- 6 was a reason given as to why the police felt it necessary to wish to move people on? ____
- 7 were people moved away more hastily than many thought they would be? ____
- 8 did the people being moved not express exasperation with the way their actions were being reported? ____
- 9 did the people being moved accept some blame for having to go? ____
- 10 did the people being moved argue that they were breaking no laws? ____

BASH

For many years, the aviation industry has <sup>1</sup> _____ to deal with the problem of bird strikes on their aircraft causing potentially disastrous accidents. In <sup>2</sup> _____ contrast to other problems facing the industry, such as the threat from terrorism, Bird Aircraft Strike Hazard (or BASH) often receives very little publicity. However, it is such a significant problem that governments around the world have <sup>3</sup> _____ the industry to do more to counter the risks of an aircraft's jet engines ingesting birds.

A famous case of BASH took place over New York in 2009 when a bird strike resulted in complete engine failure, forcing the pilot of US Airways Flight 1549 to <sup>4</sup> _____ the controls of the plane and land it manually as if it were a glider. No one was hurt, and the landing became known as the 'Miracle on the Hudson', but it was a(n) <sup>5</sup> _____ reminder of how vulnerable planes are. Following the bird strike, the general public <sup>6</sup> _____ against the authorities and blamed them <sup>7</sup> _____ to do enough to prevent the strike from happening. The <sup>8</sup> _____ that they had been unprepared was levelled at them, and they were forced to respond by initiating a cull of the Canada geese which had been responsible. As a result, over 1,000 Canada geese were killed by Environmental Protection Departments in the New York area in the summer of 2009.
