LUCKY ESCAPE

One Monday afternoon in May 2013, Diana Palmore was at home with her husband, Pete, when they heard loud sirens because a tornado was approaching the town. Diana's daughter Monica was at the local school and Diana decided to go and get her before the tornado reached the town. She ran as fast as she could to the school. In her classroom, Monica and her classmates were sitting under their desks, with their hands on their heads. Diana ran in and took Monica. But the tornado was much closer now and it was too dangerous to leave. So they hid in a bathroom. When the tornado hit, it ripped the roof from the school. Monica and Diana looked up and saw cars and trees flying above the school. 'It was very scary. The whole school was shaking,' said Monica.

When the storm passed, Monica and her mum returned home, but it was in ruins. They couldn't find Pete. But they could hear him shouting for help. Then they saw his hand and his face – in a cupboard under the stairs. He couldn't breathe, so they had to get him out quickly. Moments after they pulled him out, the whole house collapsed. The family survived a terrifying experience with only small injuries. But other people in the town were not as lucky as the Palmores. Twenty-four people died in the tornado.
