A Day on a Farm

by Aida

Last month, my parents took my brother and me to a farm in the country. My school wanted to take us there a few months ago, but the farm wasn't open during the winter, so we couldn't go.

Visiting a farm isn't something new – my school goes every year. But it's a great idea. Children can see animals that they don't normally find in the city where they live, and they get some fresh air, too.

When we arrived, we saw the list of jobs that we could do on the farm. Mum wanted us to feed the animals. Dad didn't – he wanted a coffee from the café. And my brother only wanted to see the baby animals. So, Mum and I got the food and went to see the animals. The chickens were great to feed – you just put their food on the floor. The goats wanted to eat the bag with the food, and were a bit loud and aggressive. But the horses were my favourite. They ate their food from my hand!

They also have some donkeys on the farm. I liked them. Donkeys like being with their families or with other donkeys, but they don't really like dogs. They eat a lot and can sometimes eat too much, but they don't need a lot of water. In some countries, people use donkeys to travel instead of cars because they walk a long way.

The last animals we saw were the cows. I thought cows all looked the same, but they are all different. The black and white pattern is different on every cow. They were a bit frightening because they are so big. They spend all day eating, and they also drink a lot of water, but they give us milk.
