Read the following passage then choose the best answer to each question.

Linguists believe that early men used many gestures to communicate with one another. This, it is thought, was man's first form of communication and the only one he had used for a long period of time. Even today we use some sign language: for example, we shake our head to indicate 'yes' or 'no', we point and we wave, and so on.

The first spoken words may have been early man's attempt to copy the sounds made by animals. Then he may have developed sounds of his own. Gradually, man may have repeated certain sounds so often that they became familiar and understandable to others. Once spoken language had begun, perhaps man invented new words as he needed them to express himself verbally or to name new objects.

The next stage is that man came to write down what he spoke. In this way we can imagine language growing. By using words, parents were able to teach them to their children. The children in turn probably made up new words. Each generation, therefore, in the development of language, knew more words than the generation before it. Language is still growing and changing. Can you think of some words that you use today that were not used by your parents or grandparents when they were children?

The Incredible Shrinking World

Around 60 years ago, television was introduced, shrinking the world by bringing images from all over into our homes. In the last 20 years, the internet has further connected us. With a PC and phone line, we can now communicate with anyone worldwide quickly and affordably. It is even possible, with something called a webcam, Q29.1..... Not long ago, letters were the only way to reach distant family members, taking days or weeks.

The internet gives us access to vast knowledge on any subject. Q29.2..... Topics that were once limited to books are now available to everyone. We can also communicate with strangers from different cultures through chat services, mainly in English.

Additionally, the internet lets us download music, fostering cultural exchange. This has also helped to bring down cultural barriers as we are able to hear Q29.3..... However, some worry that it may erode smaller cultures as people embrace foreign influences. Discovering new ways of thinking may lead to rejecting our own traditions.

Despite concerns, the internet has improved our world with more information and communication. Q29.4..... With knowledge comes understanding, and with understanding comes peace.
