6. Read the article. Six sentences have been removed from the text. Choose from the extracts A-H the one which fits each gap. There are two extracts you do not need to use. One has been done as an example.

Anywhere, anytime!

With the rise of Internet shopping, people have become used to being able to buy whatever they want whenever they want it, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. However, receiving your purchase after paying isn't always as quick. That is, until now…

We've all experienced it; finding the perfect gift or item online at a brilliant price, only to fall victim to delivery delays, long processing times and hold ups with couriers. B Such a service would make even next day delivery a thing of the past!

This is exactly what some online retailers are currently researching and hoping to provide via floating warehouses and drones. Although it sounds like something out of a science-fiction movie, the technology already exists and a viable system could be with us sooner than we think. But how would it work? It may sound quite far-fetched; however, the basic principle is actually quite simple. 1. ..... This would be confirmed via your IP address or (especially via mobile devices) your GPS location. The item would then be loaded onto fully automated drones, and flown to your position in a matter of minutes. 2. .....

The remarkable thing about these plans is that they aren't just ideas on paper. 3. ..... Recently, one online delivery specialist tested the system in the UK to selected locations with a lot of success. And it's not only retailers that are looking into the possibilities of robotic deliveries. Take away food companies are also keen to get in on the action, with pizza restaurants considering using drones to send pizzas quite literally 'oven fresh' within moments! 4. .....

As exciting as all this sounds, there are still many barriers currently in place that prevent it from becoming a common or widespread occurrence. 5. ..... Retailers are finding that the strict rules around drone use and flying in urban areas are making it impractical and unfeasible to realise their hi-tech vision. As promising as delivery trials have been, until legislators and authorities agree on the details, it seems that the next big customer service revolution will stay firmly on hold. However, one day you just might find that the next courier who rings at your door is a robot and not a postman!

A Such an unusual delivery method would really bring a whole new meaning to the term 'fast food'!
B But what if, instead of waiting a few days or weeks, we could get our parcels within a few minutes?
C Parcels could be either left in your garden (providing it's big enough for landings of course!) or dropped by special parachutes to your doorstep.
D After clicking 'buy' on a web store, orders would be sent to giant flying airships carrying products that are near to you.
E Patents have already been filed by various companies, and trails are even underway.
F Record numbers of people ordered take away food across Europe last year.
G While the science for drone dispatch is currently up to scratch, the legislation and regulations haven't quite caught up with the blistering technological advances.
H Lawyers are currently discussing changing legislation around who can own a drone in city centres.

7. You will hear five short extracts in which people are talking about their favourite adverts. For questions 1-5, choose from the list (A-H) what made the advert special for them.
