One of the most beautiful and popular festivals in Thailand is Loy Krathong. It takes place on the first full moon in November.

The word Loy means to float, and a krathong is a banana leaf cup. During the evening, many people go down to their local canal or river to float their krathongs. The krathongs contain flowers, a candle, and three incense sticks which are lit before being placed on the water. Some people also put a coin in their krathongs. As they push away their krathong, they ask for forgiveness for polluting the water and good luck in the coming months.

There are fireworks displays by the end of the evening when the dark comes. Hundreds of flickering lights bob up and down on the water all over a river. The reflection of the lighted candles looks like the tiny stars in the sky. It is really a memorable and romantic night.

The first Loy Krathong festival was back about 700 years ago in the Sukhothai Kingdom. At that time, people thanked the water god for the water. This is in honor of the mother of water, Mae Khongka.

Every year thousands of road users are injured or killed in road accidents. At the same time, it is bad enough that the accident rate increases during festive seasons when many people pack the roads during their rush hour to go home. For families involved in accidents, the festive season can be a tragedy instead of a joy.

There are many causes of accidents, but mainly due to human error. Carelessness, poor driving skills, and breaking traffic rules contribute to the occurrence of accidents. In many places, many children are not old enough to speed around on motorbikes. They do not wear safety helmets, and sometimes three or four are on a motorbike built for two. The law is totally ignored, and the adults are to blame for allowing these young children to risk their lives. Mechanical problems and road conditions can also cause accidents, such as brake failure, tire blowout, bad weather, and traffic congestion.

The prevention of road accidents depends mainly on the attitude of road users. They must obey the traffic laws, such as keeping within the speed limit, using safety helmets and belts, and keeping their vehicles in good condition. They must practice safe driving skills. There should be more awareness campaigns aimed at inculcating good driving habits. When road users increase their good habits, accidents can be reduced.
