Discussion:

1. Oppression and dystopian control

   - Why might a society decide to ban kissing or other forms of affection?
   - What does the punishment for kissing reveal about the values of this society?
   - Why do you think the law punishes desire rather than violence?
   - Why are dystopian stories often effective at criticizing real social norms?

2. Violence as social currency

   - In the film, slapping replaces money. Why might the filmmakers choose violence as a form of payment?
   - What does it say about the society the fact that bruises become status symbols?
   - Why do some shop assistants in Lafayette Galleries fake bruises?
   - What might the slap symbolize: punishment, power, desire or conformity?

3. Symbolism in names

   The names of the main characters in this film function as allegoric hints. What aspects of that dystopian society do they represent?

   - Malaise: meaning a feeling of emotional unease or discomfort;
   - Angine: referring to angina*, a disease of the heart;
   - Chagrin (Angine's distant husband and a coffin maker for those executed for kissing): meaning sorrow or grief.

4. Setting and Consumer Culture

   - Why is the Lafayette Galleries an effective stage for this story? (compare the homes of average people, those of wealthy people and the gallery as a converging point in this film)
   - How does turning a glamorous colourful store into a black-and-white site of violence comment on modern consumerism?

5. The Punishment – circus for the masses or warning against rebellion and transgression?

   - Why do you think the society in the film chooses to punish only women for expressing desire?
   - How does public execution as spectacle serve the society in terms of control and fear?
   - What parallels can you find with historical or modern societies that use(d) punishment as a warning or public show?

6. Big Picture

   - If affection is criminalized and violence is rewarded, what does this say about human nature and social control?
   - What's your take on the film mixing humor and horror (tragicomedy)?
   - Which elements of this dystopia feel exaggerated, and which feel familiar in our modern world?
   - What do you think the filmmakers want the audience to feel or question by the end of the film?
