Last year, Rugilė started buying limited-edition make-up products and reselling them online. At first, she thought it would an easy way to turn a profit. Sgee said, "If I buy them early, I can sell them for a higher price." Some of her friends called her a "scalper", someone who buys out products only to resell them later at a higher price.
She soon realised that some items were overpriced and didn't sell well. In fact, many of the products didn't have a long shelf life, meaning she couldn't keep them for too long since the products went bad pretty quickly. After a while she realized that she had invested roughly €150 in products that nobody wanted to buy.
Rugilė admitted that she had made several impulsive purchases and that she hadn't calculated his budget carefully.
