Stephen Siller a real hero

When you think about superheroes, what comes to mind? Superman? Captain America? The images that might come to mind could be related to famous movies around the world. But what about those real ones who aren't behind a TV screen?

On September 11, 2001, Stephen Siller had just finished his shift and was going to play golf, when he received news from his scanner about a plane that had struck the North Tower of the World Trade Center. When he heard this, he immediately called his wife, and asked her to inform his brothers that he would join them later. When he reached the entrance of the Brooklyn Battery Tunnel, Stephen found it closed. He decided to proceed on foot with 60 pounds (27.22 kg) of gear on his back. He raced through the tunnel, demonstrating his determination to fulfill his duty. Tragically, Stephen sacrificed his own life while bravely saving others
