Reading

H. Read the text and, for questions 1-5, choose the best option (A, B or C).

Lucky Food

Pomegranate

Did you know the pomegranate is one of the oldest fruits? The ancient Egyptians thought highly of this fruit and people buried them with their kings. In Turkey, people believe it is like the heart and shows long life and in Greece people smash a pomegranate on their doorstep at midnight on New Year's Eve to bring good luck to the house. The more seeds there are, the more wealth and good luck the people in the house will have in the coming year.

Fish

At New Year, in Scandinavian countries, such as Sweden, Norway and Finland as well as in Japan and China, a popular thing to eat is fish. They eat it whole. People believe it is a lucky food because the silver skin is like coins and because fish swim forward, they show we are moving forward in life. What's more, because fish swim together in big groups, they also have the meaning of having more than enough of something and that the next year will include lots of good things.

Cabbage

On New Year's Day in the USA and Ireland, people eat cabbage as a part of their main meal. They believe this will bring them good luck, especially with money because it is green like lots of banknotes. People believe cabbage brings good luck and wealth and it is also very healthy. So, eating cabbage on New Year's Day gives you a healthy start to the year!
