RECHECK BEFORE YOU RESHARE

The internet gives us a lot of information every day. However, this ease brings a big problem: the fast spread of fake news or hoaxes. Many people carelessly share news without checking the truth first. It is clear that this bad habit is dangerous and must be stopped.

First, spreading fake news easily causes public panic. When people read scary and false stories, they feel anxious and quickly send the message to their friends and family. This action creates unnecessary confusion and fear in society.

Second, sharing unverified news can ruin someone's reputation. We often see false claims about people or businesses go viral online. Even if the truth is found later, the damage is already done because the internet keeps digital footprints.

Furthermore, sharing hoaxes breaks the rules of good netiquette. Good netiquette means internet users need to keep online spaces safe and positive. When fake news is shared, it creates a bad digital environment and makes people lose trust in us.

Therefore, internet users must be more responsible. We should always check the facts from trusted sources and read the full article before we reshare any posts. By taking a few extra minutes to verify the information, we can stop the spread of fake news and build a better online community.
