The Future of Learning In recent years, the concept of "Gap Years" has become popular among students in Mexico. A gap year is a break taken by students between high school and university. While some parents fear their children will lose the "study habit," many educators argue that it provides essential life skills. Students often use this time to travel, volunteer, or take internships. This experience helps them mature and choose their university major with more clarity. However, it requires careful planning and, in many cases, a significant budget.

2. What is the main fear parents have regarding gap years?
