Read and choose the correct answer to the following questions.

As the demand for energy continues to rise worldwide, many nations are now choosing renewable energy sources instead of fossil fuels. Unlike coal and oil, which take millions of years to form and cause major pollution problems, renewable energy is sustainable.

A key benefit of renewable energy is its role in fighting climate change. Using sunlight, wind, and water to create electricity helps reduce the amount of carbon dioxide released into the atmosphere, which is a leading cause of global warming. Additionally, renewable energy can help countries achieve energy security by decreasing the need to import fuel from other countries.

However, there are still some difficulties with using renewable energy. For example, the initial cost of installing solar panels or wind turbines can be high, making it difficult for some regions to invest in these technologies. Besides, since renewable energy production depends on weather conditions, it may not always provide a steady supply in all regions. Still, as technology improves and production costs decrease, renewable energy, which has both benefits and challenges, is becoming more accessible to both developed and developing nations.

In the future, the shift towards renewable energy promises substantial advantages beyond pollution reduction, including promoting economic growth. While fossil fuels will continue to play a role for some time, it is clear that the future of energy lies in sustainability.
