List of Headings

- I. Avoid personal details
- II. Friends online should be friends in real life
- III. Block, report and talk
- IV. Stop and think before you buy
- V. Getting something for free? It's probably a scam
- VI. Be aware of your digital footprint

Paragraph A

Your privacy is important. If the wrong people get your personal information, they may bother you. Do not share personal information online. This includes your full name, age, home address, or the school you go to.

Paragraph B

Every time you visit a website, download an app, or play a game online, some information about you is saved. This is called your digital footprint. It can be risky because you do not know who can see it. Check your privacy settings and be careful about what information you share online.

Paragraph C

Playing online with friends can be fun, but be careful with people you don't know. If someone asks for your personal details, photos, or tries to become close quickly, remember they are still strangers. People who try to pull you away from family or real friends may not have good intentions. If this happens, tell a trusted adult so they can help keep you safe online.

Paragraph D

Many online games include microtransactions, such as buying outfits, items, or virtual currency. While these features can make games more exciting, they often cost real money and can quickly become expensive. Some people even compare them to gambling. Before buying anything in a game, stop and think carefully. Always check with an adult and make sure the person paying agrees before you approve any purchase.

Paragraph E

If someone is upsetting you online with rude comments, unwanted messages, or bad behavior in a game, you can report it. This kind of behavior can make you feel scared, angry, or ashamed. If you think you are being cyberbullied, log out and block the person. Do not keep it to yourself. Always talk to a trusted adult so they can help you handle the situation safely.

Paragraph F

Free things online are not always really free. Some websites ask for your email, phone number, age, or location before you get the reward. They may use your information for ads or sell it to others. Some scammers may even pretend to be your friends or family and ask for money. Be careful and do not share your personal information easily online.
