II. Choose the correct answers.

Last Saturday, our school held its annual storytelling competition in the school hall. Students from every class were invited to (1) _____ a short story in front of the audience without reading from any notes. The theme this year was traditional tales, so many students chose stories passed down through generations. Some performed a (2) _____, playing every character entirely by themselves, which the audience found particularly impressive. Others chose to (3) _____ folk stories that originally came from different regions of the country, adding their own details to make the stories feel fresh and exciting.

One of the most popular entries was a story about a (4) _____ who kept trying to steal treasure from the palace but always failed in the most (5) _____ ways — tripping over his own cape, falling into a pond, or accidentally locking himself in the wrong room. The audience could not stop laughing. The best entry of the day, however, belonged to a student who wrote an original piece about a short-tempered king who commanded his servants to imprison anyone who disagreed with him — until one clever servant found a way to change his mind using nothing but an amusing tale and a good rhyme.

Leo: Hey, have you decided what you're going to do for the storytelling competition yet?

Hana: I think I want to narrate a (1) _____ tale — one of those old stories my grandmother used to tell while spinning cotton. There's something really special about them.

Leo: That sounds great. Do you think it will (2) _____ to the judges though? Folk tales can feel a bit slow sometimes.

Hana: That's why I'm adding suspense. The version I'm telling has an unpredictable (3) _____ — nobody will see the ending coming.

Leo: Nice. Are you doing it as a monologue or with a partner?

Hana: Solo. Full monologue. I want to play both the villain and the servant myself.

Leo: Bold move. What's the story actually about?

Hana: A (4) _____ king who commands everyone in his palace to agree with everything he says. Anyone who disagrees gets imprisoned immediately.

Leo: That sounds both terrifying and ridiculous at the same time.

Hana: Exactly — that's what makes it (5) _____. The servant finds a clever way to change the king's mind without disobeying him directly.

Leo: Okay, I need to hear this. Can you recite any part of it now?

Hana: Not yet — I'm still reconstructing the original version from memory. But I'll be ready by Friday.

Leo: I'll be in the front row.

V. Read the text and decide if the statements are TRUE or FALSE.

Storytelling has existed in every culture throughout history. Long before books were printed, people would narrate tales aloud to pass on traditions and life lessons. In many communities, villagers would gather in the evenings while the elders recited stories from memory, often using rhymes to make them easier to remember. These stories frequently featured a powerful villain who commanded others and imprisoned those who disobeyed, as well as a clever servant who found a way to restore justice.

Today, storytelling has taken on many new forms. While some people still enjoy non-fiction accounts of real events, others prefer fictional tales with unpredictable plots and suspense that keeps them guessing until the very last page. Monologues performed on stage continue to appeal to audiences of all ages. However, some educators worry that modern entertainment, with its fast pace and short attention spans, may cause young people to lose appreciation for the slower, more traditional art of storytelling.

Statements:

1. In the past, rhymes were sometimes used to help people remember stories. → _____
2. According to the text, villains in traditional stories usually helped restore justice. → _____
3. The text says that non-fiction is more popular than fiction among modern readers. → _____
4. Monologue performances continue to attract audiences today. → _____
5. The text suggests that all educators believe modern entertainment has improved storytelling skills.
→ _____
