Friendship plays a vital role in the lives of teenagers. Friends bring fun and happiness into their lives, making them feel like they belong to a group. When teenagers share their thoughts and feelings with their friends, they feel supported and understood. This is especially important when they face difficult situations.

At school, having friends can make students feel more connected to their studies. When a teenager's friends care about doing well in school, they are more likely to stay motivated and focused on their own studies. Friends can help reduce stress during busy times, like before tests or exams.

Outside of school, friends enjoy spending time together doing different activities. Whether they play sports, watch movies, or simply hang out, these moments strengthen their bond. By spending time together, teenagers learn important social skills, such as communicating, listening, and working as part of a team.
