Last weekend, our drama club held its end-of-year celebration at school. The teacher asked Jake to do the honors and open the event by announcing the best performers of the year. Everyone was excited, but Jake was so high-strung about speaking in front of the crowd that his hands were shaking before he even stepped on stage. His best friend Maya, on the other hand, was completely calm and outdid herself with a performance that left the whole audience speechless.

The highlight of the evening was a set of animatronic puppets that the technology class had built. A few younger students said the puppets gave them the creeps because of how lifelike they moved. The event coordinator had warned everyone not to go overboard with the decorations, but the students ignored her and covered every corner of the hall with lights and banners. By the end of the night, the festivities had gone on for nearly four hours, and everyone agreed it had been a truly memorable evening.

Statements:

1. The teacher selected Jake to open the event by making an announcement. _____
2. Jake's nervousness was only visible once he had already started speaking on stage. _____
3. Maya's performance was so impressive that it left the audience unable to respond. _____
4. The younger students found the animatronic puppets entertaining rather than unsettling. _____
5. The event coordinator approved of how the students decorated the hall. _____
6. Most people felt the evening had not been worth attending. _____
