Unit 1-2 Written Assessment

A. Read the passage and then answer the questions.

The Inuit are a group of indigenous people who have traditionally lived in the Arctic regions of Canada, Alaska, and Greenland. They have a rich culture and have been living in the Arctic for thousands of years.

The Inuit have lived in some of the harshest conditions in the world, with extremely cold temperatures and very little sunlight during the winter months. They are skilled at survival and have developed ways to make the most of their arctic environment. They used to build their homes, called igloos, out of blocks of ice, but now, most live in houses. They also used to wear warm furs to protect themselves from the cold.

The Inuit have traditionally been excellent hunters and fishermen. In the past, they used traditional tools to catch fish and hunt for animals such as caribou and seal. These tools included bows and arrows, knives, and fishing poles. The animals they caught provided food and clothing for the Inuit. They had a deep respect for the animals they hunted, and believed that they should only take what they needed to survive.

Both in the past and in the present, the Inuit have had a strong sense of community, relying on each other for survival. They have always shared resources and helped each other out in times of need. They have a rich culture with traditional dances, music, and art. They have a storytelling tradition that has been passed down from generation to generation.

The Inuit have a close relationship with the land, and they believe that everything in nature is connected. They have a deep respect for the natural world and believe that they should live in harmony with it.

In recent years, the Inuit have faced many challenges. Climate change is affecting their traditional way of life, and they are facing new problems such as pollution and loss of traditional hunting and fishing grounds. But the Inuit are a resilient people, and they will continue to adapt and survive in the Arctic for many years to come.

The Inuit are a unique and wonderful group of people who have lived in the Arctic for thousands of years. They have a rich culture and deep respect for the natural world. They are skilled at survival and have a strong sense of community. They have faced many challenges, but they continue to adapt and survive in the Arctic.
