Exercise 1: Reading.

Building a Successful Future

Many teenagers worry about their future and the careers they will choose someday. Some students want to become doctors, athletes, or engineers, while others dream about traveling around the world. Teachers often tell students that success requires discipline and effort. Teenagers who study consistently usually develop better opportunities for the future. Good habits can help young people achieve their goals more easily.

Last year, a group of students from a local school created a community project to help younger children learn English. They taught classes every Saturday morning and organized fun activities for the children. While they were teaching, they learned important leadership skills and became more responsible. Some students were nervous at first, but they eventually gained confidence. Their teachers were proud because the teenagers showed commitment and teamwork.

Technology has changed the way students learn today. Many teenagers use online platforms to study, practice languages, and communicate with people from other countries. However, experts believe students should also develop social and communication skills in real life. If students spend too much time online, they may become distracted and less productive. Balance is necessary for maintaining both academic success and mental health.

In the future, many jobs will require creativity, communication, and problem-solving skills. Teenagers who continue learning and adapting to new situations will probably succeed in modern society. Students should not be afraid of making mistakes because mistakes are part of the learning process. If young people work hard and stay motivated, they will build a successful professional and personal life. The decisions teenagers make today can positively influence their future.
