Hidalgo, a state in Mexico full of wonderful landscapes, towns and ancient cultures. As a result of this mixture, there is an extensive diversity of crafts in its territory.

"El Valle del Mezquital", "La Huasteca Hidalguense", "Tenango de Doria" and some of its villages are specialized in handcrafts.

In "El Valle del Mezquital", textile crafts are made on a backstrap loom, and designers and workers stamp traditional designs. There are crafts that are made with hard fibers, mainly from "maguey" and "lechuguilla" which are some of the raw materials commonly used by the inhabitants. What is more, there is "La Huasteca" this region has a utilitarian objective rather than decoration. It is for this reason that almost thirty types of crafts have been registered as local in the area and they are planning to register 5 more.

Traditional Huasteca clothing has a delicate artistic confection. Throughout centuries, Nahuatl culture has maintained and reinforced a process of identity that is reflected in this clothing. Another of the essential places is the municipality of Tenango de Doria, where people make fabrics and embroidery. In these communities the traditional hand embroidery occupies a fundamental place in the material and symbolic life of the population.

They use silk threads, wool and other materials, and have been made by craftsmen and craftswomen since pre-Hispanic times. Hidalgo's crafts are diverse thanks to the different indigenous groups in its territory, in addition to the focus that certain communities have on crafts as the main means of having an income. Thus, all of these facts lead the state to possess an unmatched quality and a highly ranked place in making handcraft in Mexico.
