Four Silent Energy Drainers

- Mental overload: Waking up to a (2) of notifications makes your brain feel like it's sprinting.
- Under-fueling: Poor daily habits, such as not drinking enough water or irregular eating.
- Emotional exhaustion: Constant stress and overthinking quietly (3) your battery.
- No movement: Sitting immediately after waking up keeps your body in sleep mode.

How to Fix It

- Hydrate first: Drink water before caffeine, as slight dehydration leads to (4)
- Prepare the night before: Make fewer decisions in the morning because your brain has limited mental (5)
- One task: Start with a single (6) block. Avoid scrolling to build momentum.

II. Listen and decide whether each statement is TRUE (T) or FALSE (F).

- Under-fueling includes habits such as not drinking enough water, getting too little sunlight, and eating at irregular times. ____
- The speaker recommends going to the gym for at least five minutes each morning to build energy. ____
- Checking your phone first thing in the morning causes a dopamine spike that is immediately followed by a crash. ____
- Emotional exhaustion only drains your energy after the working day has started. ____
- Skipping meals or eating too little causes the brain to lose focus because it lacks fuel. ____
- The speaker says you need more sleep to solve your energy problem. ____

You will hear a speaker talking about energy levels and how to improve them. For each question, choose the correct answer A, B, or C.

1. According to the speaker, waking up tired is usually a sign that you

- A) did not sleep for a full eight hours.
- B) are low on energy, not necessarily low on sleep.
- C) have a physical or medical illness.

2. What does the speaker say about "Mental overload" in the morning?

- A) It is caused by not making enough decisions.
- B) It feels like your body is moving too fast.
- C) It is like starting to run fast as soon as you get up.

3. Why does sitting down immediately after waking up keep the body in "sleep mode"?

- A) The body needs movement to generate energy.
- B) Sitting down causes emotional exhaustion.
- C) It makes people want to go back to bed.

4. To fix your energy in the first 10 minutes of the day, the speaker suggests

- A) doing a heavy workout at the gym.
- B) opening curtains or stepping outside for light.
- C) drinking a large cup of coffee immediately.

5. Preparing for your morning the night before helps because it

- A) increases your dopamine levels.
- B) allows you to check your phone earlier.
- C) reduces the number of decisions you have to make.

6. What is the speaker's main conclusion at the end of the talk?

- A) Low motivation and laziness are the main reasons people fail.
- B) Energy is not something you are stuck with; you can build it.
- C) People should stop working under pressure to save energy.
