

Mark: Good morning, Miss Jane. I would like to talk about our . Do you have some time?

Jane: Of course, please sit down.

Mark: Thank you, Miss Jane.

Jane: Our is the , right?

Mark: Yes, it is right, Miss. However, there is something I need to discuss before our .

Jane: What is it about?

Mark: Our is not looking good.

Jane: Yes, I can see it. We fail to understand our new . We're supposed to drill it down.

Mark: How do I explain it to the board of ?

Jane: You can tell we are still adjusting ourselves to our new .

Mark: I'm afraid they would not like to hear that.

Jane: Yes, I am sure, but they need to see what is truly going on in the .

Mark: You are right. However, we need a leverage to eliminate any unnecessary problems.

Jane: You can come up with a solution. If you have an out-of-the-box solution, they would appreciate it.

Mark: There is a new that we can implement. I believe it's a game-changer.

Jane: That's great! Do you want to discuss the key takeaways before the ?

Mark: I would love it! I'm thinking about collaboration with our .

Jane: Are you sure about it?

Mark: Yes, I know it seems out there, but collaborating means we can reach their as well, and so do they.

Jane: I'm not sure. You can throw our under the bus here.

Mark: I might need to move the goalpost, then. I will give some time to think.

Jane: Yes, please do. Is there anything else you need?

Mark: That would be all. Thank you for your time, Miss Jane. You help me a lot.

Jane: Anytime. It is for our after all.
