These devices help them communicate with friends, search for information and enjoy entertainment. In many ways, technology has made life easier and more convenient for young people.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

However, spending too much time on electronic devices may also have some negative effects. Some teenagers spend several hours each day playing online games or scrolling through social media. As a result, they may have less time for physical activities, face-to-face communication and schoolwork. Health experts have also warned that excessive screen time can lead to eye strain, sleep problems and a lack of exercise.

On the other hand, technology can be extremely useful when it is used responsibly. Many students use educational websites and online courses to improve their knowledge and develop new skills. During the COVID-19 pandemic, millions of students around the world continued their studies through online learning platforms. Without technology, this would have been much more difficult.

Experts suggest that teenagers should learn how to balance their online and offline activities. Instead of spending all their free time on screens, they should also participate in sports, read books, spend time with family members and enjoy outdoor activities. By using technology wisely, young people can benefit from its advantages while avoiding its disadvantages.
