

NI UNA MENOS

A MOVEMENT THAT TRANSFORMED PAIN INTO POWER

Ni Una Menos (Not One Less) began in Argentina in 2015, but its impact quickly spread across Latin America and the world. What started as a response to the brutal murder of a teenage girl became a historic movement that exposed a reality hidden for too long: gender violence is not an isolated problem, but a deep-rooted social and cultural issue.

The name "Ni Una Menos" is both a cry of pain and a powerful demand. It means that not one more woman should be killed, abused, or silenced. It is a promise to fight for a world where women can live freely, without fear.

Gender violence takes many forms: femicide, domestic abuse, sexual harassment, economic violence, and psychological manipulation. It affects women of all ages, social classes, ethnicities, and sexual orientations. Behind each case, there is a system that has historically placed men in positions of power and control, while women are taught to be obedient, careful, and silent.

In Argentina, the statistics are shocking. Every year, more than 200 women are killed because of gender violence. Many more suffer in silence. For years, the justice system ignored these crimes, blaming the victims or minimizing the brutality. Ni Una Menos broke that silence. It put the issue on the front page, in the streets, in schools, in homes, everywhere.

On June 3rd, 2015, hundreds of thousands of people—mainly women—marched in more than 80 cities in Argentina. They wore purple, carried signs, and chanted: "Ni Una Menos," "Vivas nos queremos" (We want to be alive). The movement grew because it was made of everyone: students, teachers, mothers, artists, workers, LGBTQ+ people, and men who believe in equality. It is horizontal, diverse, and inclusive.

Ni Una Menos has achieved important changes. New laws have been passed to protect victims, punish aggressors, and promote gender equality. But the movement knows that laws are not enough if society doesn't change its mindset. That is why education is one of its main tools. Teaching respect, consent, and equality from an early age is essential to prevent violence before it starts.

The movement also fights against other forms of discrimination such as racism, classism, and homophobia, because it understands that all these injustices are connected. You cannot talk about women's rights without talking about human rights.

Today, Ni Una Menos continues to inspire new generations. It proves that when people come together with empathy and courage, they can shake the foundations of an unjust system. The fight is not over, but the movement has already changed the way we talk, think, and act.

Ni Una Menos is not just a protest. It is a movement for life, for dignity, for justice. It is the voice of millions who refuse to accept violence as normal. It is a reminder that we deserve a world where not one less, but all, can live.

We are not asking for favors. We are demanding our rights."
