The Importance of Breakfast

Why is breakfast important? "Breakfast like a King. Lunch like a Prince and Dine like a Pauper" It's a well-known phrase, but do you follow it?

Breakfast provides many benefits to our health and well-being. Breakfast provides the body and brain with fuel after an overnight fast - that's where its name originates, breaking the fast! Without breakfast, you are effectively running on empty, like trying to start the car with no petrol!

Breakfast supports cognitive function. Breakfast also restores glucose levels, an essential carbohydrate that is needed for the brain to function. Breakfast provides energy, studies have shown how eating breakfast can improve memory and concentration levels and it can also make us happier as it can improve mood and lower stress levels.

Breakfast provides energy needs. People's energy needs vary depending on activity levels and life stage but typically men require more energy than women. Growing children require a lot of energy, for example, boys aged 7-10 years should consume approximately 1970 kcals per day, and girls aged 7-10 years should consume approximately 1740 kcals.

Overall, breakfast is the important meal of the day to go through your activities.

No Homework for Students

Since the early 20th century, homework has been favored as a studying practice that would bridge learning at school and learning at home. It went through many phases with supporters and non-supporters. In a nutshell, assigning homework has been a controversial issue for many decades.

Scientific research has found that homework in primary school offers no academic advantage. Instead, it overwhelms struggling children and is boring for high achievers.

A 2002 study showed a direct relationship between time spent on homework and increased anxiety, anger, depression, and other mood changes among students. Homework potentially increases family conflict. Additionally, the more parents help with children's homework, the more tension children experience and, finally, they don't learn. Consequently, homework loses its original role.

It also reduces the time for other activities that provide balance and variety to a child's life, such as sports, music, art, or other extracurricular activities, or to relax and simply be children.

On the other hand, no one can dispute that a certain amount of homework promotes self-discipline, improves study skills and work habits, helps students be responsible, and prepares them for the "real world" if, of course, it is done properly.

Nevertheless, the conclusion of several studies is clear: homework drives kids away from learning, makes them less successful in school, and interrupts their childhood.
