As you look at the rows of brightly coloured fruits and vegetables in the produce section of the grocery store, you may not be (13)_____ that the quantity of nutrients in these crops has been declining over the past 70 years. Mounting evidence from multiple scientific studies shows that many fruits, vegetables, and grains (14)_____ today carry less protein, calcium, phosphorus, iron, and vitamin C than decades ago. This is a major issue if more people switch to primarily (15)_____ diets, as experts are increasingly recommending for public health and for protecting the planet. Nutrient decline “is going to leave our bodies with fewer of the components they need to mount defenses against chronic diseases - it’s going to undercut the value (16)_____ food as preventive medicine,” says David R. Montgomery, a professor at the University of Washington in Seattle. Experts say it’s important to keep these declines in perspective and not let this news stop you from eating a variety of fruits, vegetables, and whole grains to maintain your health. (17)_____ they hope the results will encourage more people to care about how their food is being grown.

V. Read the passage and choose the best answer A, B, C, or D to each of the questions that follow.

There are a number of natural disasters that can strike across the globe. Two that are frequently linked to one another are earthquakes and tsunamis. Both of them can cause a great amount of devastation when they hit. However, tsunamis are the direct result of earthquakes and cannot happen without them.

The Earth has three main parts. They are the crust, the mantle, and the core. The crust is the outer layer of the Earth. It is not a single piece of land. Instead, it is comprised of a number of plates. There are a few enormous plates and many smaller ones. These plates essentially rest upon the mantle, which is fluid. As a result, the plates are in constant - yet slow - motion. The plates may move away from or toward other plates. In some cases, they collide violently with the plates adjoining them. The movement of the plates causes tension in the rock. Over a long time, this tension may build up. When it is released, an earthquake occurs.

Tens of thousands of earthquakes happen every year. The vast majority are so small that only scientific instruments can perceive them. Others are powerful enough that people can feel them, yet they cause little harm or damage. More powerful earthquakes, however, can cause buildings, bridges, and other structures to collapse. They may additionally injure and kill thousands of people and might even cause the land to change its appearance.

Since most of the Earth’s surface is water, numerous earthquakes happen beneath the planet’s oceans. Underwater earthquakes can cause the seafloor to move. This results in the displacement of water in the ocean. When this occurs, a tsunami may form. This is a wave that forms on the surface and moves in all directions from the place where the earthquake occurred. A tsunami moves extremely quickly and can travel thousands of kilometres. As it approaches land, the water near the coast gets sucked out to sea. This causes the tsunami to increase in height. Minutes later, the tsunami arrives. A large tsunami - more than ten meters in height - can travel far inland. As it does that, it can flood the land, destroy human settlements, and bring the high death toll.

Question 18: What is the passage mainly about?

- A. What kind of damage natural disasters can cause
- B. When earthquakes are the most likely to happen
- C. Why tsunamis are more fatal than earthquakes
- D. How earthquakes and tsunamis occur

Question 19: The word "It" in paragraph 2 refers to _____.

- A. the mantle
- B. the core
- C. the crust
- D. the Earth

Question 20: Which of the following is true about the crust?

- A. There are many separate pieces that make it up.
- B. It is thicker on land than it is under the water.
- C. The mantle beneath it keeps it from moving.
- D. It is the smallest of the Earth's three layers.

Question 21: The word "perceive" in paragraph 3 is closest in meaning to _____.

- A. comprehend
- B. detect
- C. measure
- D. prevent

Question 22: Which of the following is probably true about tsunamis?

- A. They can be deadly to people standing near shore.
- B. They can move at a comparable speed to sound.
- C. They fail to damage ships sailing on the ocean.
- D. They kill more people each year than earthquakes.
