[_____]

In today's digital era, smartphones are everywhere. But should they be allowed in our classrooms? Some people believe they are useful learning tools, while others strongly disagree. Let's look at both sides.

On the one hand, smartphones can be a great support for learning. Students could use them to research information quickly or access educational apps. Furthermore, it makes group collaboration much easier.

However, smartphones might also cause major distractions. Students could easily lose focus by checking social media or playing games during lessons. In addition, excessive screen time reduces face-to-face interaction among classmates.

In conclusion, smartphones have both benefits and drawbacks in an educational setting. Schools must establish clear rules so that students can use them wisely without disrupting the learning process.
