Some experts believe that teenagers today feel more anxious and have lower self-esteem because of the impact of social media and texting. Online communication is different from face-to-face interaction since teens often miss out on body language and facial expressions, which can cause misunderstandings and make real conversations feel intimidating.

Many teens also feel insecure when they see others looking perfect online. To compensate, they share photos that appear flawless, but this can make them feel worse if their online image doesn't match their real feelings.

Parents can support their children by being role models in how they use technology. They should spend quality time with their kids, create tech-free spaces and times at home, and encourage children to get involved in hobbies or activities they enjoy. When kids focus on what they can do instead of how they look or what they own, they often feel happier and more confident.
