

Day Full of Experiences

This is the first time I A. have eaten B. have read C. has eaten D. have eat a ceviche from Manabí, and the mix of fresh seafood and peanut sauce was absolutely incredible. While sitting at the restaurant near the coast, my friend started asking me about my past travel experiences and asked, “A. Have you ever seen B. Has stolen C. Has they sent D. Stolen a whale in real life?” I told him about a trip I took years ago when I spotted a humpback breaching right near our boat.

We then got to talking about where we come from and where we settled down, so I asked him, “How long A. have you lived B. have you played C. has you live D. have he lives in Cuenca?” He shared how much he enjoys the historic city and its crisp mountain air.

Later that afternoon, I checked my phone to finish up some work and noticed a long list of messages. I looked at my colleague in surprise and said, “How many emails A. have you sent B. have you lived C. has you sent D. has you lived today?” You must have typed twenty!

Suddenly, right as I set my device on the table, a stranger ran by and grabbed it. I jumped up and shouted in panic, “Someone A. has stolen B. have eaten C. eat D. has ate my cell phone!” Oh no! All my contacts are there!
